

Describe a time when you made a promise to someone model answer 1

Introduction

Well, giving commitments is always a good decision, but it requires a lot of hard work to be accomplished.

To whom did you make the promise?

Here, I would like to talk about a promise I made to my parents.

What was the promise?

I promised them I would score good marks in my 10th board examination.

Why did you make the promise?

Actually, during my 10th grade, my friends and I used to play for an hour only. However, it increased to 4 hours which disturbed my academics. As a result, I passed my first examination with just passing marks. My parents got angry and scolded me for the mismanagement of time. At that time, I realized my mistake and I promised them I would pass this grade with flying colors.

Was the promise easy to achieve?

It was challenging to work hard on the first day of promise, as I found it boring. But then I started taking an interest in every subject. As a result, I became accustomed to it and I scored 95% on my boards.

Conclusion

Hence, promises are worth keeping as they make us do something unthinkable.

Introduction

Many times, we come across situations wherein we have to make commitments.

To whom did you make the promise?

Today, I would like to talk about a promise that I made to my parents.

What was the promise?

I promised them that I would join my office when an appropriate vaccine was released.

Why did you make the promise?

During the COVID pandemic, it was a catch22 situation for me, and, due to travel restrictions, we could not reach each other as I live far away from them. Additionally, they tried too hard to reach me but couldn't. That's why they got too possessive about me. Honestly, no child can see their parents under stress, so I made this promise to them.

Was the promise easy to achieve?

It was too tough for me to fulfill my obligation. Despite the fact that I could secure a work-from-home position due to my solid relationship with my company, my output dropped significantly. Not only that, but I gained a lot of weight as a result of my lack of physical activity. Apart from that, I found myself socially isolated.

Conclusion

Then finally, in July, the government released the vaccination. I applied as a volunteer and took the dose. I am back at work and my parents were proud of me as I kept the promise.

Describe a time when you made a promise to someone. Model answer 3Introduction

Individuals usually fulfill their promises, but it is okay when they do not. People who do not follow their commitments and make false pledges have no value and are not respected.

To whom did you make the promise? What was the promise?

I made an assurance to my childhood friend that I would meet her on Sunday as we haven't catch-up each other for a long time.

Why did you make the promise?

We have been together since we were in kindergarten. But after 10th grade, we chose different streams. Although we were in the same school, we used to meet during lunch breaks and after school. But after going into the newer environment of college, we both got busy with our own pieces of stuff. Nonetheless, we used to make plans and end up canceling them.

Was the promise easy to achieve?

It wasn't easy at all, as on Saturday, my mother fell sick and I had to take care of every member on her behalf as doctors restricted her from doing any household chores. As a result, I have to break my promise because I've badly gotten stuck in all this.

Conclusion

Later on, I apologized to her for canceling our plan, and luckily, she understood my problem and forgave me.
