

In the past when students did a university degree, they tended to study in their own country. Nowadays they have more opportunity to study abroad. What are the advantages and disadvantages of this development?

Give reasons for your answer, and include any relevant examples from your own knowledge or experience.

Write at least 250 words.

In the Past, When Students Did a University - Band 8 IELTS Model Answer

Governing bodies in the modern world are always introducing novel policies aimed at assisting the youth of the nation. Youth mobility and education abroad are both possible and encouraged.

Leaving one's home country is the first issue. It's an opportunity to expose yourself to fresh information, other environments, and different people. Moreover, leaving your country to pursue further education can open doors to other possibilities. Kids who have access to greater education tend to be more enlightened and progressive as adults. Then, once people have received a solid education, they will be able to pursue fulfilling careers of their own choosing. If you go to school in another country, you can get a job in that country once you graduate. Migration also provides a chance to learn about and experience other ways of life, including a plethora of languages, cuisines, and ways of thinking. Some of the benefits of studying abroad include expanding one's linguistic and social horizons and making new friends.

However, there are drawbacks to studying abroad, too. If you don't have family there, you could feel homesick and isolated at first. Making new friends can be difficult when you don't know anyone and are in an unfamiliar environment. There's also the moment that you lack the funds necessary to study in another country.

In conclusion, I believe that every student has the right to study wherever he or she chooses. Personally, I opted to gain an international education because it affords the opportunity to see the world and experience other cultures and traditions. Additionally, I intend to attend college in Canada, but my ultimate objective is to return home after gaining international experience and education in order to teach others about the world.

In the Past, When Students Did a University - Band 7.5 IELTS Model Answer

These days, everyone must acquire a degree from an accredited institution. People today appear to like studying abroad for a variety of reasons, including the opportunity to expand their horizons, take advantage of superior resources, and develop their independence. Studying abroad has never been a popular choice for students in the past because of the stigma attached to doing so.

Many people from the past would stay in their home nation to get their education because they believe that studying abroad is too challenging. People who have already decided to pursue their education are not frightened by the unfamiliar cultural norms they are sure to encounter on campus. In this way, individuals are able to study in their own nations with relative ease, but they are limited in learning about themselves and the world beyond their own culture because they only interact with people from their own country.

There are, nevertheless, a plethora of possibilities for students who would like to pursue their education overseas despite these drawbacks. To begin, many people can now qualify for financial aid to attend the college of their choice thanks to the increased competition for admissions. Meeting new people provides an opportunity to learn about various cultures, as well as to share what you know about your own. Learning a new language is an obvious benefit of studying abroad, as it's impossible to get by in a foreign country without being able to interact with the locals.

In conclusion, I believe that, given enough time and effort, persons who continue their education abroad will have a profoundly good impact on their lives. In addition, people as a whole need to exercise greater caution when making decisions, especially those related to their children's education, and parents need to do what they can to help their kids succeed in all areas of life.

In the Past, When Students Did a University - Band 7 IELTS Model Answer

Higher education used to be exclusively available within a country's borders. However, due to the proliferation and the abundance of chances, everyone nowadays chooses to continue their education abroad. This essay will address the benefits and drawbacks of this trend.

Firstly, there are several positives associated with higher education pursuits in nations other than one's own, making studying abroad a viable option for many students. It's a great way to meet interesting people from many walks of life and gain insight into other cultures, not to mention lay the groundwork for making professional connections in the future. Furthermore, graduates of international universities are exposed to several job options. Getting an education in a different country can help you improve your skills and give you access to a wider range of professional contacts globally.

However, there are some negative aspects of studying in a foreign country. When people experience a drastic change in their environment, such as when they study abroad, they can experience a wide range of emotions, including homesickness, depression, and loneliness. This can lead to unnecessary anxiety in kids who aren't well-equipped to deal with the challenges posed by these variations. Furthermore, if students decide to pursue higher education in a foreign country rather than their own, then the country's economy will suffer greatly, and valuable citizens will leave.

In summary, more and more students are opting to study in other countries as a result of rising globalization. Conversely, there are advantages and disadvantages to this arrangement. Therefore, it is up to the individual to exercise good judgment while determining whether or not to acquire an education in a foreign country. I think the cons of studying abroad are more significant than the benefits.

In the Past, When Students Did a University - Band 6.5 IELTS Model Answer

It is evident that, in the contemporary era, people move abroad for study purposes as it gives the opportunity of earning while learning which is good for their future as experience, whereas decades ago, people always prefer to get a bachelor's degree at their own country as they were not much fascinated about other countries as compared to now, and this phenomenon has merits and demerits too due to factors which affect directly while learning in another country.

As a first step, there is a myriad of benefits to studying abroad, such as the chance to earn more money in line with one's skills and the access to educational resources that are unavailable in one's home country. If a country has a wealth of expertise in a certain area, visitors from other countries often travel there to learn from the best. With the exception of India, most countries permit students to work while attending school, giving them a leg up in the workforce whether they come from a privileged background financially or not. In addition, one of the most important skills for a better life is being able to manage one's finances, and this approach teaches us how to do just that.

A person who wants to study abroad should, on the other hand, give some consideration to the culture and environment of the nation in which they intend to enroll. An unbalanced workload can cause stress, illness, and a poor outlook on one's host nation; students studying in a foreign country may also struggle with the language barrier and report negative emotions.

While studying abroad has many benefits, like the chance to broaden one's horizons and gain valuable experience, it often comes with drawbacks, such as homesickness or a lack of friendships back home.