It is considered that events like the International Olympic games, Commonwealth games have a positive influence on the totality of international tensions and implies a safe reveal of patriotic emotions. I would agree with the statement to some extent.

On the one hand, participants from different countries respect each other before competing and while playing against each other, they perceive each other with a spirited attitude. Organizing such events itself is considered as an attempt towards peace and participation of several nations justify it very well. Achievement of any country amongst all is entertained and celebrated equally which highlights a public expression of joy and pride. Even after winning a competition, positive and encouraging comments are received from significant personalities like dominant political leaders and famous charity group founders across the globe and published by the media.

On the other hand, popular events like the football world cup may heat up a discrete competition within the audience belonging from different nations. Elaborating it, challenging or offensive comments towards other groups of audience might be intended in the name of cheering up the players. The unpredictable human nature and emotions is another cause of justifying how athletes get aggrieved by each other and the situation adds up to the tensions.

To conclude, it cannot be denied that organizing famous international competitions contributes towards global peace as its positive outcomes can be seen clearly in the public. However public disputes as well as controversies within the players are probable to occur anytime due to the competition and tension.

There is no doubt that famous events like the World Cup are necessary for reducing diplomatic tensions as well as to express one's emotions regarding the nation healthily. Yet, nowadays, in a fast growing political world, it has not been purely the case.

When the event is held, all the citizens are engaged in watching it, this mass involvement implies a deduction in the rate of crime and accidents all over the countries. All the teams as well as audiences live under a similar atmosphere and initially same emotions together. Moreover, people consider their nation's participants as their representatives and soldiers, so they express patriotic emotions by cheering the team enthusiastically.

However it is often noticed that sometimes casualties in the heat of the moment are formed during the sports. This can be misunderstood as an intended action by a player because of his temper or ego. Seeing this can lead to large public fights too in case they have also been offended. Furthermore, some people claim that the world play involves politics that automatically spreads rumors even before the event is conducted. Rumors invite differences in opinions initially which might lead to offense to some communities of a nation. Large discussion among the political leaders can take place and in an active economy, markets too get affected by such events.

In conclusion, conducting international sports and games is a fine way to convey nationalistic emotions but it does not diminish the probability of miss-happenings fully. Among the large audience, misunderstanding is common to occur, hence, leading to ill-motivated actions.

Events like the World Football Cup are favored in almost every nation. Citizens from different parts of the world have always been eager to find ways in which they can express their emotions regarding their nation. Dominant events like the FIFA World Cup are seen as the best way to do so. But there are few incidents that have occurred on the negative implication side of the purpose.

On one hand, sports events like the World Football Cup aids people to be aware about achievements and norms of their rival countries. This also serves as a best tool to effectively show dedication and commitment towards the nation as people put their efforts to cheer the team up. People take pride over small achievements made in the game by their nation's team.

On the other hand, political quarrels can take place if any action or decision is misunderstood as an outcome of political involvement, which has been very common these days. National leaders have left no stone unturned in utilizing the role of sports in the name of ministerial interests. For instance, in the United States, in 1980, summer olympics was canceled in response to the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan sports scandal.

To conclude, people pursue popular events like international sports as an efficient way to express their interest and patriotic feelings but invasion of politics, which is a very active group of the society, might end up to big changes and other negative outcomes over the economies. Uncertain incidents are rare but not unnoticeable.

Worldwide sporting events have been favored and encouraged for everyone and a numerous number of people attend these events to express their compassion and belief for their country. I completely agree that such opportunities could be significant to the people of nations.

Famed sports events like Olympics and SEA Games may bring people together as these are always awaited events across the globe. This has brought many notable changes. For example, football has been able to sustain the differences that gave each European nation their own sense of identity as well as enhanced the connection or bond that binds them together as one entity. Moreover, participants feel dedicated to their nation with an intensity as they take interest, train themselves and make efforts to win the competition for the country. Athletes feel contentment with the entire nation as the citizens encourage them which creates a positive gesture of belongingness.

Worldwide sports are held with a motive of bringing peace as it bridges cultural and linguistic differences among nations and points towards a common ground. However an athlete represents his nation, hatred of the counterpart could become an antipathy of the nation which may create certain unwelcoming incidents.

In conclusion, popular events like the football World cup are mainly a dominant and encouraged occurrence and this has been proved by records of significant changes caused by them but a highly unhealthy competitive attitude may not result in certainty in the end. Slightly negative action can trigger huge quarrels among the linguistic or cultural communities.
