Some people believe that it is best to accept - Band 8 IELTS Sample Essay

Accepting unfavourable working conditions or financial hardship is considered noble by some experts. However, a few others argue that it would be beneficial to keep trying to improve the current situation. Both, the parts are discussed in the ensuing paragraphs. My position is outlined below.

Explaining the former viewpoint, the first and foremost thing is that an individual should accept an unsatisfied job and other unfavourable issues in order to fulfil basic necessities. For instance, a man earns for his family to provide food, shelter and clothes even though he gets less paid or is not satisfied with his job by making compromises in his own happiness. In addition to this, the reason for accepting the conditions by the individual is that he could be powerless to do anything as fighting against the situations may cause him mental anguish. As a result of this, it will cause him to evolve into a tense person.

Scrutinising my perception and the latter view point, I believe that one should keep on trying to come out of worse situations. I firmly believe that, if one starts to take charge of their own lives then it will help oneself to create favourable circumstances. In addition to this, a person can excel when they take charge and put forth significant effort toward their goals. Furthermore, there is always a way forward, problems can be solved and progress can be made. One example is India's Prime Minister, who began his career selling tea but rose through the ranks through hard work and intelligence.

To sum up and offer my position, I believe that people should never give up and should always try to improve bad situations. Some people believe that one should try to adapt to unfavourable circumstances.

When the topic of situations arises, there are divided opinions. Some are of the notion that bad circumstances such as a dissatisfying work or insufficient funds has to be accepted whereas, a few others counterclaim that it is great to improve such situations by making efforts. In my preference I believe that efforts are to be made even in the worst situations. Both the opinions and my preference are discussed below.

On the one hand, supporters of the former viewpoint say that those who think it's best to accept one's fate tend to be the kind of people who would rather wallow in misery than take action to improve their circumstances. Consider the case of someone who is unhappy with their employment yet refuses to leave it. Their lack of faith in the possibility of a positive outcome is evident here. The unpredictability of the future causes them to doubt it. They have no will or ambition to quit their dismal employment since they are struggling to make ends meet. If we choose to make peace rather than battle, we risk alienating our loved ones.

However, I agree with those who advocate the latter, and I think we should keep trying until we succeed. You shouldn't stick around at a job where you're unhappy either with the work or the pay, because you'll never be able to develop your skills or advance in your career. So, if a job isn't paying enough or isn't rewarding the employee's efforts, it's time to look elsewhere. Likewise, if an employee is unhappy on the job, he should look for ways to make it better rather than accepting the situation.

To put it in the nutshell, I think that people should try to change and improve unfavourable situations rather than just accepting them as they are.

The debate over whether to try to improve the situation or simply accept bad situations is never ending. There are times when it's best to just roll with the punches, but in most cases you should put up a fight and try to change things. Both of these points of view will be addressed in this essay, and then I will give my own conclusion.

First and foremost reason for the former viewpoint is, if people are unhappy in their jobs, it could be because they want to be comfortable in their life. They are unable to accept challenges and frequently change careers. As a result of this, they are doomed to remain unhappy for a considerable amount of time. It's unclear whether they're in a bad spot because of the circumstances or because they've chosen to do nothing to improve their situation.

However, I think things can be better through sheer force of will and persistence. For instance, the current Prime Minister Narendra Modi, who did not come from a politically powerful family, was able to become the Prime Minister of India. Motivated individuals, in my opinion, never accept a situation that prevents them from reaching their full potential, because they know what they're capable of and refuse to accept any excuses for falling short. They will not give up until they have achieved their goal. That maxim serves as the foundation for their daily lives.

In conclusion, I think it's important for people to have a sense of direction and to take charge of their own lives. When faced with adversity, we must do our best to turn it into an opportunity like turning lemons into lemonade and drinking it.

In this day and age, If we allow ourselves to become discouraged when things get bad, we will miss out on the opportunity to learn and grow. There are those who believe that the best course of action is to simply give in and accept the unappealing truths of life. This essay will explain why I disagree with this viewpoint and will also discuss the view itself.

On the one hand, those who advocate giving in to adversity appear to lack the guts to improve their circumstances. For instance, if one is unhappy with their job but refuses to leave it. Clearly, they don't have faith that things will turn out well for them. Due to the unknown nature of the future, they begin to doubt it. They have no willpower or motivation to quit their miserable job because they are struggling to pay bills and put food on the table. Acceptance is the best policy in such a predicament, since changing the outcome is futile.

However, there are those who argue that we should make an effort to better our circumstances. If you're unhappy in your job, for instance, you shouldn't be afraid to find something else. If we put in the effort to learn new things and improve ourselves, we should be able to land a better job. In the present day, she enjoys a fulfilled and successful existence. The only thing we're missing is the courage to put ourselves first and refuse to accept a lifeless circumstance.

To sum up and offer my position, the best course of action is to stop fighting the world and start making peace with it. However, there are those who believe we should work to better these circumstances and pursue other options.
